MEMORANDUM FOR: DDCI

SUBJECT : Center for the Study of Intelligence Monographs

1. You asked for comments on two CSI monographs: "The Future Market for Finished Intelligence" and "The Field Station of the Future."

2. I read the first of these some time ago and found it overwritten, but making a few good points. See pages i & ii for key findings. Its principal judgment is that the demand for finished intelligence will remain high. Additionally, the monograph concludes that we will be faced with greater requirements for crisis reporting and interdisciplinary analysis.

3. "The Field Station of the Future" is a more worthwhile paper, and were it not so long (148 pages) I would recommend your reading it in its entirety. It is an excellent introduction to many current DDO problems. On the other hand, its authors pass off as original judgments much conventional wisdom, or at least views shared by much of the DDO command structure. I recommend your reading pages 5-10, "Principal Judgments and Recommendations," for a good summary of the monograph's contents. Additionally, if you have the time, pages 136-148, "Summary of Recommendations," provides a longer summary in terms of the actions the monograph recommends the DDO undertake.
